[Heterotransplantation of pulmonary tissues in athymic mice]. Male athymic nude mice (nu/nu) were used as recipients for the grafting of pulmonary tissues from male and female mice. A left lung from sex-matched normal mice were transplanted in the subcapsule of nude mice and the grafts were examined histologically, histochemically and biochemically. The viability of the grafts was confirmed by animal survival. Pulmonary tissues obtained from normal (male and female) animals were able to induce the formation of host hemopoietic cells. Other differences seen in the histological and histochemical features between hosts and donors were due to the development of recipient characteristics. A modest but definite amount of collagen fibres was observed in the grafted tissue. However, a striking difference was observed in the glycosaminoglycan content of the grafts obtained from normal hosts and nude animals. The results show that the pulmonary tissue grafts can survive and function in the immunodeficient nude animals.Q: What is the difference between "autopilot" and "autopilot assist"? I have heard different pilot on different airlines say "on autopilot". I have also heard "on autopilot assist" used. What is the difference between these two phrases? A: This is my very rough understanding of the situation... If you have an autopilot capable aircraft, but it does not have the avionics to do fully automatic flight, like full automation like that of the Airbus A320 family or the Boeing 737 family... If you have an autopilot capable aircraft, and you manually control the plane... If you have an autopilot capable aircraft, and an autopilot that can be aided by manual pilot input... Which one you use will depend on several factors, such as your ability, comfort with the aircraft, where you are flying (high altitude vs low, for example) where you are flying (ground vs cruise, for example) weather conditions, how well you are able to manually fly the plane

"The Centre has not finalised the rates on fuel. So, we have suggested on different basis that the state can formulate its own rates for each product as per convenience," Revenue Minister M.C.Venkatesan told reporters after the Cabinet meeting here. Responding to a question on the trade body Tamil Nadu Exports Association's allegations that excise duty on petrol was around Rs.10 and so, it should be allowed to import diesel and petrol free of duty, Venkatesan said: "The duty is fixed by the government and it doesn't take any objection. The government will continue to take the decisions. "
